

Peer consultation & Executive Circles

Growth does not come from knowledge alone. It comes from the right conversation.

Who it is for Aspiring and female executives

Format Programme · small, trusted group

The further you get in your career, the smaller the group of people you can speak with truly freely. About leadership, ambition, difficult choices, collaboration, influence or the next step in your career.

That is exactly when a trusted inner circle is valuable: a small group of professionals who bring different experiences and perspectives, challenge each other and help each other forward.

Research shows that such a strong network (not least for women) can play an important role in reaching senior leadership positions.

A safe place for sharp questions

Our peer consultation groups offer (aspiring and female) executives a trusted setting to pause on the questions that really matter.

Not a training with standard answers, but a structured dialogue around current dilemmas from your own practice.

That might be your next step towards a board role, but just as well leadership, collaboration, influence, persuasiveness, positioning, making choices or dealing with conflict.

Reflect. Challenge. Grow.

By sharing experiences and perspectives, you look at your own actions through different eyes.

What is peer consultation?

Peer consultation (intervisie) is a structured dialogue in a small, trusted group of professionals about current dilemmas from their own practice. By sharing experiences and perspectives, you see your own actions through different eyes.

Peer consultation helps you to:

- reflect more sharply on your strengths and development areas;
- discover new perspectives and solutions;
- broaden your behavioural and leadership repertoire;
- make more conscious choices in your further development.

And perhaps most importantly: you deliberately make room to step out of the daily rush and invest in your own growth.

Sometimes you don't need a new answer, but people who help you ask a better question.
